

Victorian day rainbow theatre!

Audrey, Robert,

Jessica

I grew up in the South West and went to a small village school. We were never lucky enough to experience a Theatre in Education Company come to visit, as the school simply couldn't afford it. We all know how much schools have suffered in the budget cuts and I believe this is even more prominent in smaller schools. I'm extremely passionate about our work reaching children who are in a smaller village schools as I think it's so important that all children should have the opportunity to experience Theatre in Education as there is so much to be gained from it, especially for SEN children who often benefit from a much more practical mode of teaching.

Now that we are firmly on the radar in the South West, and have run several successful tours in the region, I have decided to run a brand new Rainbow Pilot programme that will directly benefit schools who have less than 60 children per year group.

The most popular and longest-running of all rainbow workshop pupils, in the costume of poor Victorian children if possible are taken back to feel what it would be like to live in Victorian times.

Fun Facts

.Rainbow Theatre South West was established in 2014 in the City of Bath under the direction of actor and director Chris Carruthers.